Sensational Saturday - Dothan

February 23, 2019

The Child Care Education and Training Programs in Dothan and Montgomery are excited to announce that Deborah Stewart of Noblesville, Indiana will be our special speaker for Sensational Saturday 2019. Dothan’s Sensational Saturday is scheduled for January 26, 2019 and Montgomery’s is scheduled for February 23, 2019.

Deborah holds an associate degree and a master degree in Early Childhood Education. Deborah is often a guest moderator of The Bam Radio show and is the Early Learning Expert for Indiana Fox 59 Morning News. She is the author of the book “Ready for Kindergarten” which can be viewed on Amazon and has published over 50 simple songs for young children which are available on her Teach Preschool Blog.

Deborah firmly believes that young children learn and develop best through play. It is through play that young children experience their world, work out their social and emotional well-being, develop and master life-long skills, and build a confident sense of self, school, learning, and life.

After years of experience in the classroom and teaching in a broad range of early childhood classrooms, Deborah has been inspired by many different kinds of teaching philosophies and methods. Evidence of the differing philosophies are evident in her classroom as well as the writings Deborah shares on her Teach Preschool blog. Above all, Deborah embraces early childhood teaching methods that consider the best interests of the child through a play-based, child-led, hands-on teaching approach.

We look forward to seeing you at our 2019 Sensational Saturday Child Care Conferences!

Teachable Transitions

In the article, Teachable Transitions, by Rae Pice she emphasizes that transitions should be handled in creative ways because no matter how you structure your day, transitions are an inevitable part of working with young children. There is always somewhere to get to next, another activity to begin, or an activity to clean up.

One benefit of planning transitions is to create another opportunity for learning. Children learn to bring satisfactory closure to activities through successful transitions. It teaches them to move easily into and out of group situations and practice following directions. These dynamics naturally entail cooperation and consideration, which are important social-emotional skills. Transitions can also be linked to curriculum content, adding continuity to your day and the repetition necessary for young children to “cement” the information acquired.

Additionally, transitions offer opportunities for problem solving, creativity, and self-expression. We can’t ever have too much of those; they’re among the skills we can be certain kids will need in this rapidly-changing world.

Transitions usually require moving from one place to another. Because movement and music are natural partners they are perfect instruments for transition times. Children love movement and music which helps turn transitions into pleasurable experiences, even something to look forward to. Movement activities, songs, and fingerplays provide focus for the children during transitions, hold the attention of waiting kids, and are easily tied to curriculum content. For example, if you’ve been studying animals, you can invite the children to move like some of the quietest ones: cats, turtles, or rabbits. If you’ve been studying the weather, you can ask them to transition as though they were clouds or a gentle breeze. Moreover, transitions present chances for further experience with movement and music - two subjects today’s teachers often have trouble finding time for.

Here are some general tips for keeping transitions tranquil and teachable:

• Remain calm and collected. If you appear “unhinged” during transitions, children will become unhinged, too. On the other hand, if you move slowly and speak softly they will respond in kind.

• Make any necessary preparations in advance. If children are transitioning to lunch, for example, they shouldn’t have to sit at the table waiting, the meal should be ready as children are concluding their prior activity. By the same token, if the transition is going to involve a prop, or maybe a fingerplay, have it ready beforehand.

• If the transition involves taking turns, such as those relating to toileting or donning outerwear, be sure the same children aren’t always chosen to go first. For example, one day you can assign brown-eyed children to go to the courtroom first. The next day all children wearing blue can go first, while children born in January lead on the following day. Young children aren’t great at waiting turns, but when experience tells them they’re going to get one, they will learn to wait.

• When you’re using fingerplays for transitions you’ll want to demonstrate the actions while speaking or singing the words yourself. You can then repeat the process, encouraging the children to perform only the actions. On the final repetition, the children can choose to do one or the other, or both.

• When you’re using songs for transitions and you want the children to sing along, repeat the songs as often as necessary, assuring the children that you don’t expect them to sing along until they feel comfortable doing so. Often, young children won’t sing a song until it has become as familiar to them as an old friend.

Transitions to outside the classroom can be especially chaotic. You’ll want to give the children a reason to manage themselves. A song can make leaving the room fun! The following is sung to the tune of “The Farmer in the Dell”:

We’re going out the door.
Hi-ho, outside we go.
We’re going out the door.

We’re walking down the hall.
Hi-ho, outside we go.
We’re walking down the hall.

We’re always chosen to go
We’re always chosen to go

As you can see, it takes only a little bit of imagination and intentionality to create tranquil, teachable transitions. Yes, it may take a bit of time and planning in the beginning, but in the long run it will be worth it for both the children and you.
Special Events Spotlight

Opening Doors of Children with Special Needs - Dothan
On Saturday, August 25th Dothan held their annual Opening Doors for Children with Special Needs Conference. The topic for the day was Preparing for the Future: School Readiness Skills. Mrs. Shannon Cook, Ed.D, and Mr. Kerry Varner spoke to 66 child care providers and child development students. Mrs. Cook discussed the different types of special needs children might have, including Autism, various types of disabilities and other impairments that affect their lives. She discussed the affects these special needs can have on communication, interaction and learning. Mrs. Cook also outlined the building blocks of Kindergarten Readiness. These include motor skills and self-care, self-regulation, social expression and Kindergarten academies and how child care providers can address in these areas. Mr. Varner shared the story of his family’s journey with his son who is on the autism spectrum. He spoke about the wide range of emotions the family experienced in the beginning, the support system they had and stories about his son’s educational journey. Participants also gained insights into the struggles and joys families of children with special needs are faced with every day. Both presenters stressed the importance of remembering that despite their struggles, each child is unique and are children first.

Family Guidance Center’s Child Care Education and Training Program in Montgomery had 26 participants to complete the Alabama Early Learning Guidelines Course. They will receive a credential from the Alabama Department of Human Resources.

Infant Quality Tip

The transitions involved with feeding, diapering, bathing, and playing fill up the day of an infant. The infant is learning in every waking moment, interpreting the environment, and practicing new skills such as reaching toward objects, pointing, grasping, and releasing objects; learning to move toward objects or people; and self-regulating. Remember that to make transitions an important part of the day when caring for infants.

Toddler Quality Tip

Transitions
Pramming the bakes on this activity and starting right up with another one -- are tough on toddlers. After all, toddlers have only one - or two - arms and need to be carried, lifted, or pushed. If your toddler might have tantrums when told it’s time to stop what they’re doing. Temperament also plays a part in how your little one handles transitions.

Some ways to help toddlers with transitions are: give advance warning; develop rituals, keep language simple, offer choices; and get down on the child’s level.
